WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

They stood, as that was already dedicated by the blood of heroes, but they had met to consecrate themselves to the soil, so yesterday the gathering was to consecrate the present generation to the upbuilding and support of the country which has so nobly been founded and defended for us. Let there ever be in our hearts the flower of patriotism which bloomed perennially in the heart of Washington. Our fathers threw themselves into the branches in national affairs and let us now strive to maintain our institutions which have been perfected by those self-sacrificing men. We are liable to forget the definition of true patriotism in times of peace. The true patriot will always have an eye to the needs of the time, and will also have a conscience for his country's sins. This has been the policy of all the truly great statesmen of the past. Put patriotism over partisanship. In early times before the separation from England, the cause of Boston was the cause of all the colonies. In this case surely patriotism rose above party and sectionalism. Benjamin Franklin said: "Let us all hang together," and while perhaps he meant it in a little different sense, this is the main point in our national glory to-day. He is indeed a very poor patriot who loves his party or his state better than his country. If the youth of the country are taught to have ideals of patriotism, they will when they grow up be truly ideal patriots.

At the conclusion of Mr. Poter's address Mr. Charles H. Mann sang the old song "The Sword of Bunker Hill" and made it still more appropriate by substituting in the last verse for twenty, sixty, so that the lines read: "And sixty millions bless the sire And sword of Bunker Hill!" It brought forth an encore and tumultuous applause. Mr. Mann sang the old ballad in a most impressive manner and responded to the encore by singing again the last verse. He was the recipient of a beautiful bouquet of flowers. The song was by the request of General David Humphreys branch, S. A. R.

The H. H. S. chorus rendered another selection, "The Flag of the Free," and Dr. F. A. Cavell gave a so-called cry-ton talk, which was a rapid drawing of the faces of our nation's heroes. The pictures presented were those of Washington, Lincoln, Cleveland, Harrison, Grant and Butler.

Mrs. S. S. Thompson then sang another solo, "The Star Spangled Banner," which received much well merited applause. The H. H. S. chorus joined in on the chorus and very pretty effect was produced by the waving of flags.

An old naval veteran, Jack Norris, late of the United States recruiting ship Richmond, occupied a seat at one side of the stage holding a large flag and clad in full regulation United States navy uniform.

The exercises closed with the benediction by Rev. A. D. Vail, D. D.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.
Celebration at the Free Kindergarten.

A gentleman present at this celebration writes as follows:

What can be more appropriate to the day and times than the training of the children of our foreign population in the principles of true patriotism?

This at least is the feeling of those who have in hand the care of the Elm City kindergarten on Oak street.

This institution was founded a year and a half ago to reach and care for the multitude of little children between the ages of two and a half and four years of age who were found on our streets too young to be admitted to the public schools and neglected by their parents, who were obliged to struggle for a living.

Could any one who had seen these little ones as they first came to the kindergarten have run in to their bright, sunny rooms at Westside hall yesterday and beheld the change that had been wrought in less than eighteen months, they would hardly have believed their eyes.

The timid, shy, crying awkwardness of the first days has given place to a bright, happy, intelligent responsiveness that is marvelous to behold, and does great credit to the patient toil of the most efficient corps of teachers, whose untiring efforts have wrought the change.

For some time past the name of Washington has been often on their lips.

They have learned the story of the early life of the young patriot and while hearing the story some busy fingers have pasted stars and stripes; others have sewed outlines of his early home, his hatchets and a bunch of cherries on their sewing cards, while the little ones have pasted together yards of red, white and blue chains to adorn the room in honor of Washington's birthday.

Yesterday the room was most tastefully decorated with flags and pictures of Washington, as well as with the many samples of the pretty work that the children's little fingers had wrought in honor of the Father of his Country.

It would be hard to describe the eager expectancy depicted on the faces of the little ones as they gathered in the kindergarten room. While waiting for the opening exercise they made their own broke over the bounds of strict order in the enthusiastic words of "red, white and blue" or some other song they had recently learned.

Forty-eight little tots were present, most of them under four years of age, and it was surprising how well they could sing their little songs or tell in childish words the story of Washington.

To the usual meal of crackers and milk were added popcorn and candy and a small piece of apple. The candy was served in pretty paper cups decorated with colored paper. As very little of its contents was eaten at the table, each child's name was placed in his or her cup and they were allowed to take them home at the close of the day.

The children sang several songs and executed some complicated and difficult marches that showed a good deal of intelligence for such wee folk.

The entire exercise demonstrated the fact that even at a very early age children are capable of receiving and retaining a great deal of useful knowledge.

Among the present membership are several whose improvement within the past eight months has been truly surprising, and the saving of only a few such as these would fully repay the cost of the work; but the time for fruit has not yet come and cannot be expected for some time. Who, then, can measure the vastness of the results that will in due time crown the labors of the workers in this field?

We wish that the people of our city could be brought more closely in contact with this most excellent work, for we are certain that if it were fully appreciated they would most gladly contribute liberally to its support and enable the society to open another room or even several more for the extension of the most important work.

J. Preston Strong, Yale treasury building, is treasurer of the Elm City Kindergarten association and will be glad to give any further information in regard to the work, or to receive contributions.

There is sense and method of a public school giving up its regular exercises to a celebration of Washington's birthday. The theory of it is that patriotism and love of country has its cradle in the schools, that a patriotic man is the development of a child, trained in the element of patriotism, when the mind is plastic and susceptible. No better line could be inscribed upon the
